For over 35 years Pam Giblin has provided clients with strategic counsel and advocacy on a broad array of environmental issues, particularly in the areas of air quality and climate. Well known for her deep historical knowledge of the Clean Air Act, Ms. Giblin has helped clients achieve a number of challenging public policy objectives and is regularly called on to assist in multi-stakeholder advocacy effort.

Over her career, Ms. Giblin has established strong working relationships with regulatory agencies, environmental groups, business representatives and community decision makers. Clients have seen the advantages of tapping into these relationships for collaborative dispute resolution and for third-party issue support. She has helped clients achieve landmark environmental successes, including the permitting of the largest refinery in North America and the licensing of the country's major low-level radioactive waste facility.

Ms. Giblin was born in New York but spent part of her childhood in Latin America and on the Texas border (Laredo & McAllen). Her maternal grandfather was one of the signers of the Mexican Constitution and former mayor of Mexico City. She is fluent in Spanish and has helped clients on projects in Mexico, especially in the burgeoning energy sector that was recently opened to foreign investment.

She has served on the Clean Air Act Advisory Committee, a senior-level policy committee established by Congress to advise EPA on issues related to implementing the Clean Air Act and she is a past president of the American College of Environmental Lawyers.

She serves on UT's International Board of Advisors and on UT's KBH Energy Center's Executive Council.

Ms. Giblin was recently appointed to the federal Good Neighbor Environmental Board. Its mission is to advise the President and Congress on good neighbor practices along the U.S. border with Mexico.
